

Creating a metropolitan public transport authority

Course description

Increasing suburbanisation has created a need for neighbouring authorities to collaborate in providing public transport by forming metropolitan public transport authorities. This course will address the potential scope of MPTA activities, including alternative approaches and voluntary vs. obligatory PTAs. It provides examples of successful MPTAs and addresses potential legal barriers and political obstacles

Target audience

Practitioners in local or regional administrations across Europe who are interested in making the public transport in their metropolitan area more integrated and user-friendly

Thematic area

Public transport

Please click here to find the course.

Date of release

2014

Associated with project

TIDE